

The Prince of Wales.

Whenever the Prince of Wales comes to the duties which devolve upon him, he is sure to find that his position is one of the most difficult and arduous which any man can occupy. He is surrounded by a host of enemies, and he is constantly being assailed by the most powerful and influential of the world. He is the target of the most violent attacks, and he is the object of the most intense hatred. He is the most hated man in the world, and he is the most hated man in the world.

At Sandringham the Prince and Princess of Wales had the quiet, well ordered, tranquil life which they have been accustomed to. The Prince and Princess of Wales had the quiet, well ordered, tranquil life which they have been accustomed to. The Prince and Princess of Wales had the quiet, well ordered, tranquil life which they have been accustomed to.

Although many of the larger kinds of birds, which once gave peculiar interest to the Prince of Wales, such as the great bustard and the wild swan, have disappeared, the pre-eminence of the country for sporting purposes is still maintained, and if there be districts in which the number of pheasants is still maintained, and if there be districts in which the number of pheasants is still maintained.

The means of East Norfolk pack, now hunted by Mr. Fontaine, are generally accessible. Late in the season, when the shooting parties—the lot covers for pheasants, the heathens of rabbits and the partridge drives are more numerous, and cutting excursions to the marshes for snipe, and to the ponds near Babbington for sea trout and charr, are more numerous, and cutting excursions to the marshes for snipe, and to the ponds near Babbington for sea trout and charr, are more numerous.

There are very few men in England who make as good a sport of the Prince of Wales. His name is a household word, and his name is a household word. His name is a household word, and his name is a household word. His name is a household word, and his name is a household word.

An Artistic Cross Quilt.

I have just finished my "cross" quilt. And it is very dear to me, as the work of a relative and friend are represented. I have just finished my "cross" quilt. And it is very dear to me, as the work of a relative and friend are represented.

Yes, there are sixteen squares in it, and I have just finished my "cross" quilt. And it is very dear to me, as the work of a relative and friend are represented. I have just finished my "cross" quilt. And it is very dear to me, as the work of a relative and friend are represented.

Oh, it is very easy, and such charming work! I make one it does not take very long. Get your friends to give you some of the old and new, and I am sure your maker would save you a bundle. Then cut out the same square and make it into a quilt.

Lamps are a necessity in modern fashionable furnishing. The number that can be counted in one room is marvellous; and that the light they give is so quiet and so soft, and so comfortable, and so comfortable, and so comfortable, and so comfortable.

"Paintings upon glass are very beautiful when executed to order. The designs are of all kinds, and the designs are of all kinds, and the designs are of all kinds, and the designs are of all kinds, and the designs are of all kinds.

OFF AT LAST.

On the War Path with the Hastings Volunteers.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

Of course your readers will know ere this of our day at Kingston. There have we are off at last. Almost anything is better than barracks life, if the barracks at Fort Frontenac are a criterion to go by. In regular barracks the most quarters surely might be more convenient and comfortable than they are at Fort Frontenac. In comparison some stock yards are models of convenience and comfort. Our experience, however, will not come amiss. It will prepare us for some things undoubtedly in store for us.

The Kingston ladies did one very sensible thing. They presented each man of the Battalion with a very neat little print pocket book or case containing thread, needles, buttons, &c. The men will find these amongst the most useful things in their outfit.

The men left Belleville in high spirits, but whilst in Kingston they seemed to sober down somewhat. No doubt the weather and the barracks life there had most to do with this. Their spirits, however, are on the rise, and songs and laughter are almost constantly mingled with "the shriek and rattle of the rushing train." Very different sounds will no doubt greet our ears ere long—the sudden rifle crack, the rattling volley, the wild war-whoop, the cry about, the ringing cheer, and, alas! the voice of pain and the dying groan. It is sad to think that some, perhaps many, now so full of life, hope and anticipation, will soon sleep beneath the prairie, but then one might sleep his last sleep in many a war place, and it is consolatory to think that if such should be our fate, there will be no danger of our being resurrected for scientific purposes.

The enemy will have to be gradually pushed back and starved out. If all communication is cut off for them to the south and east, lack of ammunition and supplies will soon bring them to time. As dinner time approached the men got quite hilarious and beat time on their big tin plates, like savages on their tom-toms.

More am. If I get time, to-day and are expected to reach Biscotaing to-morrow (Wednesday) at 3 o'clock in the morning and the end of the C.P.R. track about 12 o'clock and day. They will follow the Kingston contingent per C.P.R. Co.'s sleighs at once through the gap.

MATTAWA, Ont., April 7, 2.45 a.m.—The Midland regiment arrived here all well, making good progress. The men were breakfasted, and we will proceed to Biscotaing, 21½ miles, before they get another square meal. There is not much snow, and good weather in this section.

STURGEON, Ont., April 7.—Private Keely of the 4th Battalion, Cornwall, jumped through the window of a train with the Midland Regiment forty miles west of Sturgeon Falls this noon, and struck out for the woods. He was demented. He was not found.

The special C.P.R. train that left Kingston on Monday with 350 men from that city passed Sudbury Junction at 10 o'clock this morning and arrived at Biscotaing at 2:30 this afternoon. They will reach the Gap about 2 o'clock to-morrow morning. The Toronto Artillery, which left there at 2 o'clock this morning, passed Carlton Junction at 1:30 p.m. to-day and are expected to reach Biscotaing to-morrow (Wednesday) at 3 o'clock in the morning and the end of the C.P.R. track about 12 o'clock and day. They will follow the Kingston contingent per C.P.R. Co.'s sleighs at once through the gap.

I don't know. I don't know what may happen while I am away. I don't know what the plots and plans may be of the person who has caused me to be sent away.

"What do you mean? What person, Lawrence? Your mother—your sister?" Lawrence looked at me without answering, in the intense searching intent way as before, for a minute or two, then he said: "Last night, Violet. You are such an innocent little thing that I don't know how to tell you what I must."

I could not help looking rather frightened at this opening, and he stopped a little to comfort me before he went on—"Last night, when I had left you and got home, I found Mr. Rayner just leaving the Hall."

Mr. Rayner? Then he must have gone on there from the Vicarage, and he must have come straight from the Hall when he passed me to go to his room, as I crouched in the shrubbery. He surely spoke to my father. You know there is more sympathy between him and me than there is of any of the rest of us, so I went straight ahead and told him all about you, and what a sweet little thing you were, and I asked him to find me some occupation in an office, or on a farm or something at once, for I must have a home to you to before the year was out. And the dear old dad said you had a good sweet face, and he should like to have such a daughter, and what would the money say? You know my mother rules him with a pretty tight hand; and he may say 'Yes' to anything when her back is turned, but he dares not say 'No' to her to her face. And my mother has strong prejudices, and wants me to marry some one with money, 'to improve our position in the county.' And I told him I was twenty-four, and old enough to know my own mind, and I didn't care what she wanted. But he begged me not to offend her, and then said, 'She has just been in to tell me something that may have a bearing on the matter. It seems she has set her heart on going to the Riviera, and insists on your going with her. Now, supposing I stock a farm for you while you are away, you can step into it directly you come back, I suppose, that she won't want to be gone more than a couple of months—and you can try your hand at farming for a year or two, and keep it warm for Jack, who wants to take to it, he says. When you are living away from us, you will be more your own master, and your mother will have to submit to your marrying whom you like. So don't say a word to her, or to your sisters, or know they always side with her—fill you come back.' I didn't much like this; but I couldn't say 'No' to my father—he has been so good to me, and I couldn't refuse to go with my mother; nevertheless I was half mad, all the same, for I know who has persuaded her to this."

"To you? Who?" "Mr. Rayner. Haven't you noticed how he has been steadily getting round my mother for the last two weeks, till he rules her as surely as she rules my father? I've watched him, and tried to put her on his guard; but I am no match for him. I wondered what he was doing it for; now I see."

"But I don't, Lawrence. Why are you so prejudiced against Mr. Rayner—when he has been so kind to me too? What should he persuade her to go away for?" Lawrence looked at me earnestly.

"To get me away?" "To get you away? Why should he do that?" Lawrence began to speak, but he got very red, and stopped.

"He doesn't like me, Violet, and he doesn't want me to have you." "Oh, indeed you are mistaken, Lawrence! He has often praised you."

"Yes; that is his cunning. But I tell you he would stick at nothing to prevent my marrying you; and as long as you are under his roof I shall never know a moment's peace," said he excitedly. "He is a bad man."

"Oh, Lawrence, you shouldn't say that! I know him better than you do, and I know that he is goodness and kindness itself."

"Violet, you are no wiser than a child. How can you see the way he treats his wife, and yet call him good?"

"His wife! Ah, I know all about that, but I must not tell you. Indeed he is not cruel to her, as you think, Lawrence. I know all about it; I do indeed."

"Well, then, since I may say it, what do you think of the way he treats you? Doesn't he show her as much care for you more than for her? Can't you see that he is making love to you?"

"Laurence!" said I, aghast. "How dare you say such a thing! What have I done that you should think so ill of me as to think I would let a man who is married make love to me? How could you tell me you loved me, thinking that I will never speak to you again?"

I turned sharply from him, and was back in the field among the people before he could stop me. Tea was being given to the children, and I went to help; but the enjoyment of my day was gone. In a dazed state I was still laughing about cake, too miserable and excited to know quite what I was doing, when Lady Mills and Mr. and Mrs. Rayner came up to me. This lady, who had charmed me so much, had in return taken a fancy to me, and had begged Mr. and Mrs. Rayner to let me go home with her to stay until Monday; and they had consented. At another time this invitation would have made me half mad with delight, but now it seemed only to overwhelm me with terror at the thought of going among so many strangers. However, they sent me home, prepared what things I wanted, and told me to make haste.

As I was packing a muslin frock I had never yet worn, and wishing I had something handsome for the occasion, suddenly thought of the paste pendant Mr. Rayner had given me. That would look quite dazzling peeping out of the muslin and lace round my throat. I packed that and a piece of black velvet to wear it on, and I was scarcely ready before Jane came up and said that Lady Mills' carriage was at the gate waiting for me.

But just outside the hall door I met Laurence, with a rose in his hand.

"Violet, Violet, don't go without a word to me! Here—throw away that rose and wear mine."

"I will wear yours," said I, "but I can't throw away this one till it is dead. That would be ungrateful."

"Did Mr. Rayner give it to you?" "Yes."

He snatched out of my hand the rose I had just taken from him, and flung it away.

"Beg your pardon, Miss Christie, for my presumption in thinking you would accept mine after his. Good-evening."

He stole off toward the plantation path, and he would not turn round when I called "Laurence, Laurence!" I could not stay to run after him, even if I had been able to overtake him; so, with tears in my eyes, I plunged into the flower-bed where his rose had fallen and picked it up, and put Mr. Rayner's gently on the ground instead. It was an ungrateful thing to do; but I must do what Laurence wished, even if he did not know it.

And so with a very heavy heart I ran up the path to the carriage, and started on a visit which was to be strangely eventful to me.

The Rochester Herald of the 14th inst. has the following: "The following is an extract from the report of the inspecting officer, who recently visited the signal office in this city. 'Observer McLean is giving very great satisfaction. He is spoken of by every one in more complimentary terms than any other observer I have met. He is most accurate, courteous, and works harder outside his office and gives more information to the people and to the press than I have ever known of a man in a similar position. He is doing this, leaves out of the question the amount of work he does and the energy he puts upon himself.' Mr. McLean is a son of the late Prof. J. B. McLean, of this city. He is now in the employ of the Signal Office at Albany, N. Y."
